CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

Constitution of the United States, Amendment XIV 3

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1972

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

TO SAID HONORABLE COURT:

Petitioners pray that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit entered in this case on September 6, 1972.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals is not yet reported. It is set forth in a separate appendix, along with the order denying rehearing, and the opinion of the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals of the State of Texas in a companion case.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was rendered on September 6, 1972, and the order denying rehearing was entered on October 31, 1972. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C., §1254(1).

QUESTIONS RAISED

1. Did electors whose votes had been illegally diluted through State protected ballot box stuffing have a justiciable interest in an action under the Civil Rights Acts (42 U.S.C., §1983 and 28 U.S.C., §1343, et seq.), and the Fourteenth Amendment? (pp. 10-12).

2. Under the circumstances set out in Question 1, was there a substantial Federal question presented by an action to protect the stated rights of the electors so as to give the United States District Court jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action? (p. 13).

3. Assuming that Intervenor Collins was an indispensable party to the action, was his appearance as a Class Plaintiff sufficient to meet the requirement, and if not, did the permission for him to intervene as a party, and for the Plaintiffs to amend and adopt his plea before the trial on the merits cure the supposed defect in alleging jurisdiction in the original complaint? (pp. 14-16).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

Amendment XIV:

> Section 1. "* * * No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

R.S., §1979, 42 U.S.C., §1983:

> "Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress."

71 Statute 637, 28 U.S.C., §1343:

> "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action authorized by law to be commenced by any person:"
> "(3) To redress the deprivation, under color of any State law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage, of any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States or by any Act of Congress providing for equal rights of citizens or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States;

"(4) To recover damages or to secure equitable or other relief under any Act of Congress providing for the protection of civil rights, including the right to vote. June 25, 1948, c. 646, 62 Stat. 932; Sept. 3, 1954, c. 1263, §42, 68 Stat. 1241; Sept. 9, 1957, Pub. L. 85-315, Part III, §121, 71 Stat. 637."

STATEMENT

This is a class action brought on behalf of electors in a Democratic primary to prevent infringement on their rights of franchise, due process and equal protection of the law by means of State practice. The Defendants are the members of the Harrison County Democratic Executive Committee, the Clerks of the State District and Appellate Courts, the State District Judge, and the Election Officials of the County. Jurisdiction was primarily based upon a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, 42 U.S.C., §1983, and 28 U.S.C., §1343.

Under the "mootness doctrine" of Texas, where a contestant has been judicially pronounced to be the winner of a primary election by a State Trial Judge, the name of the contestee must yet be placed on the general election ballot, unless an appeal from the judgment may be processed and a retrial, where ordered, finally determined before the elapse of the time required for preparing ballots for the general election. The number of procedural delays allowed made it certain that no primary election contest could ever be finally determined before the date for preparing ballots in Texas (44 Tex. Law Rev. 322, App. 71-75).

The District Court herein concluded that the practice was violative of the due process and equal protection clauses of the Constitution (App. 19, 22). This conclusion was not questioned in the briefs nor in the opinion of the Appeals Court. Pursuant to it, the District Court entered a preliminary injunction on September 29, 1970, restraining the holding of a general election until the Texas Courts could finally dispose of a pending election contest of the Democratic primary (App. 68-70). The order was issued under the doctrine of abstention (F.F. on merits, ¶24 App. 16-17), with the Court retaining jurisdiction pending the outcome of the State election contest.

An October 12, 1970 final judgment of the State Trial Court in the contest case eliminated ballots stuffed for Defendant Ammerman and decreed Intervenor Collins to be the winner of the nomination (App. 25-26). His name was ordered placed on the ballot for the general election. On October 13, 1970, the Plaintiffs moved the Federal District Court to lift the preliminary injunction, and order the name of Collins placed on the general election ballot in accordance with this judgment. Counsel for Ammerman opposed the motion, and in answer to a question of the Court on the hearing as to what power the Court would have if the Texas Appeals Court ignored the restraining order and yet held the case moot, replied:

> "I don't believe they would do that. I have no guarantee, but if they did, this Court still has control. You would have jurisdiction over when the election would be held and could determine then whose name should go on." (Hearing on Mot. to Dissolve Prel. Inj., pp. 10-13, F.F. on Merits, ¶27, App. 17).

Ammerman did perfect an appeal, and on March 9, 1971, the Texas Court of Civil Appeals ordered the State Trial Judgment set aside, and the election contest case dismissed because it concluded that the trial and appellate courts of Texas had been ousted of jurisdiction by the issuance of the preliminary injunction (App. 26-37). The Texarkana Court was the Court of last resort on the question under the Texas practice.

The Federal District Court proceeded to try the case on its merits, and on May 27, 1971 entered a judgment permanently enjoining the State Trial Court from invalidating its judgment, or dismissing the State action (App. 76-80). It ordered the holding of a special general election. Concluding that Ammerman was collaterally estopped from questioning the determination of the issues in the State election contest (App. 22-23), the Court ordered the name of Collins alone to be placed on the ballot as the nominee of the Democratic party for the office in question, County Judge of Harrison County, Texas (App. 78).

THE OPINION OF THE APPEALS COURT

In essence, the Appeals Court held that the Plaintiffs had no justiciable interest in the action without the joinder of Collins as a Plaintiff, and that no substantial Federal question was presented to give the Court jurisdiction of the subject matter.

It erroneously held that the State Trial Court had eliminated the ballots illegally stuffed, and that consequently there could be no question of dilution. The State Court did find the ballots spurious on the first trial of the contest (App. 14), and entered a judgment calling for a new primary election. When the Democratic Executive Committee refused to obey the judgment, and Collins was refused mandamus to procure the election (App. 14-15), Ammerman attempted to rehabilitate the spurious votes on two appeals (App. 27-29). The question of "dilution" thus remained in the case. Indeed, it is the cause of Ammerman continuing to serve as County Judge when he has neither been legally nominated nor elected to the position.

For, without the dilution, he would never have been the apparent winner of the primary in the first place.

The inevitable result of the March 9, 1971 opinion of the Texas Appeals Court, and the September 6, 1972 opinion of the Circuit Court is the closing of both State and Federal Courts to relief for electors whose constitutional rights have been violated. Each Appellate Court has asserted that jurisdiction over the subject matter of this case lay exclusively in the other forum. Despite the fact that the State District Judge and the Federal District Judge in each case concluded that fraudulent ballots were cast, and that the candidate receiving the majority of the legal ballots was not certified as the nominee, the combined decisions of the Appellate Courts rewarded the fraud by denying relief in either court. The principles announced make it totally impossible for aggrieved voters and candidates to successfully challenge a fraudulent election in either State or Federal jurisdictions.

This is true, because a voter would be denied standing in a State Court under the Texas decisions, and would be denied standing in a Federal suit under the Appeals Court decision, unless the candidate was a party. Assuming the candidate desired to join in a Federal suit, the State procedure for contesting the election would require Federal Court abstention, even though the "mootness doctrine", as demonstrated in this case, makes the remedy totally illusory.*

*After the date of the opinion below, the Appellants in Cause No. 72-3307, U. S. v. Bishop, et al., pending on appeal in the Fifth Circuit, filed a motion to dismiss because successful candidates were not made parties in the district court. The suit sought declaratory and injunctive relief, including the setting aside of an election under the Voters Rights Act, because of an alleged selective and discriminatory purge of voters by a voting registrar. Thus, we see the likely impediment to suits under that Act, because of the erroneous decision in this case. Theretofore, to the writer's knowledge, winning candidates had not been held necessary parties to such suits.

The only way to insure that a forum is open for relief from election fraud in the future, not only in this instance, but for all future elections in the State of Texas, will be for this Court to exercise its jurisdiction to review the present case.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. The decisions of the Appeals Court and the Texas Appellate Courts holding that the Trial Court in neither of the jurisdictions may entertain a suit for the protection of a voter's civil rights under 42 U.S.C., §1983 is in conflict with the plain wording of the provision and the decisions of this Court in McNeese v. Board of Education, 373 U.S. 668, 671, 10 L. Ed. 2d 622, 625, and Mitchum v. Foster, 40 L.W. 4737, 32 L. Ed. 2d 705, 92 S. Ct. ____.

2. The Appeals Court holding that qualified electors have no standing to maintain a suit for injunctive relief against deprivation of their Federal constitutional rights through the conduct of primary elections and state practice thereunder, without the joinder of a candidate, is in conflict with decisions of the same Court earlier rendered, such as Sanders v. Gray, (3 judge court, 1962) 203 F. Supp. 158, and is in conflict with prior decisions of this Court, as exemplified by the opinion in Gray v. Sanders, (1963) 372 U.S. 368, 9 L. Ed. 2d 821, 83 S. Ct. 801.

3. The holding of the Appeals Court that the Trial Court lacked necessary jurisdiction to prevent infringement on constitutional rights by temporarily restraining the holding of a general election, and thereafter ordering a new election to protect such rights is in conflict with the earlier decisions of the same Court such as Hamer v. Campbell, (Mar. 1966, 358 F.2d 215, 221, cert. den. 385 U.S. 851, 16 L. Ed. 2d 612) and with the decision of this Court in Hadnott v. Amos, (1969) 394 U.S. 358, 22 L. Ed. 2d 336, 89 S. Ct. 1101.

4. The Texas Courts deny a voter standing in an election contest, and deny a candidate relief under the mootness doctrine. Hence, the Appeals Court decision denying a voter standing in Federal Court without the joinder of a candidate is tantamount to a holding forever denying a forum for the protection of constitutional rights to vote.

ARGUMENT

The Denial of a Forum for Protecting Civil Rights

This Court has often held that a voter in a state election is entitled to the constitutional guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment, and that no right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of officials (Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 5, 17, 11 L. Ed. 2d 481, 485, 492). In McNeese v. Board of Education (373 U.S. 668, 672, 10 L. Ed. 2d 622, 625), the Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C., §1983) was thus characterized:

> "The purposes (of the Act) were several-fold—to override certain kinds of state laws, to provide a remedy where state law was inadequate, 'to provide a federal remedy where the state remedy, though adequate in theory, was not available in practice' (id. 365 US 174), and to provide a remedy in the federal courts supplementary to any remedy any State might have. Id. 365 US 180-183."

Later, in Mitchum v. Foster (40 L.W. 4737, 32 L. Ed. 2d 705, 92 S. Ct. .....), this Court spoke of remarks in the debate surrounding the passage of Section 1983 to the effect that "(State) judges, having ears to hear, hear not", and went on to hold that:

> "The very purpose of §1983 was to interpose the federal courts between the States and the people, as guardians of the people's federal rights—to protect the people from unconstitutional action under color of state law, 'whether that action be executive, legislative or judicial'." (32 L. Ed. 2d at 705).

The Texas Court's "mootness doctrine" presents a perfect example of judges who "hear not". Through the use of delay that makes impossible the assertion of civil rights, the Texas Courts have destroyed them. If the opinion of the Federal Appeals Court in this case remains unchanged, the Federal Courts have likewise been closed in contravention of the authorities discussed.

The Plaintiffs Had a Justiciable Interest

This case is not an election contest. No party to the action ever contended it was an election contest. In the motion to dismiss, relied upon by the Appeals Court as reason for dismissal (App. 45, 60-62), the point that the suit was an election contest was not raised. In the briefs of the Defendants in both the Trial and Appellate Courts the central, if not only, contention was that the Trial Court was inhibited from giving relief because of the Anti-Injunction Statute.[1]

Following the decision on June 19, 1972 in Mitchum v. Foster, (40 L.W. 4737, 32 L. Ed. 2d 705, 92 S. Ct. .....) the Appeals Court called upon the parties for briefs on the subject of the effect that the decision would have on the present case. Thereafter, and seven months after submission, the Court, sua sponte, concluded that the Trial Court litigated an election contest in granting the preliminary injunction, and that since Collins, one of the candidates, was not a party, the Court lacked jurisdiction (App. 60-62, 65-67). Briefs were not called for. Had they been, we would have called the Court's attention to this language from Gray v. Main, (U.S. District Ct. M. D., Ala., N.D., March 28, 1968) 309 F. Supp. 207, 210:

1. 28 U.S.C., §2283: "A court of the United States may not grant an injunction to stay proceedings in a State court except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments. June 25, 1948, c. 646, 62 Stat. 968."

"The defendants also argued that this court did not have jurisdiction based upon 28 U.S.C., §1344. As the court pointed out in the order of September 7, 1966, this suit was not an action to recover possession of any office as contemplated by Section 1344, but rather it is an action to redress certain alleged deprivations under color of state law of the Negroes' right to vote with jurisdiction specifically conferred by 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1343(3) and (4). It was also noted that although the relief could possibly involve ordering a new election, the determining factor is not whether one candidate or another should have been elected but whether the holding of a new election is an appropriate means to remedy the discrimination of which the plaintiffs complain." (309 F. Supp. 210).

True, on trial upon the merits events had overtaken the case, and to accord complete relief the Trial Court found Ammerman collaterally estopped to deny that Collins had won the nomination, and ordered the name of the latter to be put on the ballot. Collins was before the Court as an intervenor at this time, and, indeed, was before the Court as a class plaintiff when the original complaint was filed.

In this setting, the inevitable result of the Appeals Court opinion was to deny the Plaintiffs-Voters standing in Court in contravention of the pronouncement of this Court in Gray v. Sanders, (372 U.S. 368, 375, 9 L. Ed. 2d 821, 827) as follows:

"We also agree that appellee, like any person whose right to vote is impaired (Smith v. Allwright) [US] supra (321 U.S. 649, 88 L. Ed. 987); Baker v. Carr, supra (369 U.S. pp. 204-208), has standing to sue." (An accompanying footnote shows the right to have been recognized 250 years ago).

There Was a Substantial Federal Question

The opinion below says that no substantial Federal question existed, because the spurious votes stuffed in the ballot box had been eliminated by the State Court judgment that had ordered the holding of a new election, among other reasons, because of the wholesale fraud involved in the ballot box stuffing (App. 64). The opinion further divulges that this identical judgment had been stayed at the time of the filing of the complaint herein, by appeal to the Texas Appellate Court (App. 15, 43). Ammerman was seeking to rehabilitate the spurious votes on this appeal, as he did on the last; so it is far from accurate to say that the spurious votes could not have diluted the ballots of the Plaintiffs at the time of the preliminary injunction. As a matter of fact, a week after the issuance of the preliminary injunction, the Texas Appellate Court reversed the judgment calling for a new election, and remanded the case for retrial to determine which ballots were illegal and who received the majority of the votes cast (App. 17, 46-47).

In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the claim of the Plaintiff was "so attenuated and unsubstantial as to be absolutely devoid of merit", as required for dismissal for want of jurisdiction of the subject matter (Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 199, 7 L. Ed. 2d 663, 675). The action sought to protect rights defined by this Court in Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 12 L. Ed. 2d 506, thus:

> "And the right of suffrage can be denied by a debasement or dilution of the weight of a citizen's vote just as effectively as by wholly prohibiting the free exercise of the franchise." (377 U.S. 555, 12 L. Ed. 523-524).

The Trial Court Properly Enjoined the Holding of the Election

The Appeals Court held the District Court to have no power to enjoin the holding of the general election under Hamer v. Campbell, (5th Cir. 1966) 358 F.2d 215, cert. den. 385 U.S. 851, 16 L. Ed. 2d 612) and Bell v. Southwell, (5th Cir. 1967) 376 F.2d 659. "There can be no question", said the Court in Hamer, "that a district court has the power to enjoin the holding of an election (358 F.2d 221)". The only question the Appeals Court could have determined was whether the case was one appropriate for the relief sought, and as well said in McGill v. Ryals, (U.S. District Court M.D., Ala., N.D., Mar. 31, 1966) 253 F. Supp. 374, 376:

> "We know of no mechanistic formula to apply, nor compelling legal argument which can help us make this determination."

Neither the briefs nor the opinion below challenged the findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the Trial Court following the hearing for preliminary injunction, and we have attached them as pp. 1-10 of the Appendix. In justice to the District Court, they merit attention. They show that: Spurious ballots were stuffed for Ammerman so as to dilute the vote of each elector who voted for Collins, and to indicate Ammerman the apparent winner, although Collins received the majority of the legal votes cast (¶IX, App. 4); the appeal from the State judgment ordering a new election had been set for submission and argument on the day before the deadline for printing absentee ballots (¶¶XIV, XV, App. 5); considering the nature of the case, the election contest will not be finally determined in time for the beginning of absentee balloting, and consequently the suit will be declared moot under the Texas practice (¶¶XVII and XVIII, App. 6), in which event the Plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury by Ammerman being named County Judge (¶XXI, App. 7); and in the event the Clerk was not restrained, he would order the printed ballots not later than the deadline date with the name of Ammerman appearing as the nominee of the party (¶XIX, App. 7).

Bear in mind that this District Court had received in evidence all of the proceedings in the State election contest, including the findings of fact and the opinion-judgment of the State Trial Judge of July 27, 1970. In it the State Court had found the primary election so irregular that he felt compelled to set it aside.

The District Court was charged with notice of the substantial interest of all of the voters in honest elections. We quote one of the conclusions of law he made:

> "IV. Considering the relative importance of the rights asserted by the Plaintiffs and the acts sought to be enjoined, the irreparable nature of the injury that would flow from denial of preliminary relief, the probability of the ultimate success or failure to gain the entire relief sought by the Plaintiffs, and the balancing of damage and convenience generally, as well as the interest of the public, the Court concludes that a Preliminary Injunction to protect the Plaintiffs' rights should issue." (Conclusions of Law, App. 9).

The Appeals Court reviewed the District Court action just as though an election had been held and the District Court had ordered it set aside. To the contrary, the distinction between equitable relief in such case and in ours is well marked by this language from Hamer (supra, p. 14):

> "This action does not mean that we necessarily would set aside every election in which a substantial number of citizens have been denied the right to vote. This is not a case where an election is challenged for the first time after it is held. Here appellants attempted to enjoin the election, and failing where they should have succeeded, they were diligent in seeking to have this failure rectified by our reversal prior to the election. Our absence of facilities to rectify rapidly should not now prevent us according full relief to appellants." (358 F.2d at 222, emphasis added).

CONCLUSION

Under Monroe v. Pape[2] and McNeese v. Board of Education,[3] the District Court was under no obligation to withhold granting substantive relief before disposition of the State election contest. Nevertheless, he invoked the doctrine of absention,[4] and entered only such orders as would protect the status quo pending the outcome of the election contest in State Court (App. 15-16).

We believe that this extending of the courtesy of comity by the Federal District Court does not merit the conclusion of the Appeals Court that this action resulted in a head-on collision between the Federal District Court and the Texas Court of Civil Appeals (App. 39), nor the singular conclusions found in the State Appellate opinion (App. 33-37). The preliminary injunction simply sought to remove the unconstitutional barrier to final decision of the State election contest, and permit a completion of the trial on its merits. It is true that when the Texas Appellate Court twice refused to consider the merits of the contest under the unconstitutional "mootness doctrine", that the Federal District Court was obliged to complete the trial of the present action.

The circumstance that on final disposition the District Court accepted facts found in the only judgment on the merits in the State election contest, and concluded therefrom that Ammerman was collaterally estopped to deny that Collins received the majority of the votes cast, by no means justifies the statements of the Appeals Court that the District Court decided the local contest (App. 39). Nor did it justify that Court's conclusion that the District Court "named Collins as the County Judge of Harrison County" (App. 50). To the contrary, the application of the doctrine of collateral estoppel made unnecessary the holding of another primary election, leading the District Court to allow complete relief by simply ordering a special general election with the ballot carrying the name of Collins as the nominee of the Democratic Party.

Although the Appeals Court opinion expressed its displeasure with the results of the trial on the merits, it concluded it could not review it because the "jurisdiction was based on retained jurisdiction" (App. 66). Bear in mind that all parties, including the candidate, were before the Court for the trial on the merits. It can scarcely be suggested that where no general election has been held for whatever reason, a District Court may not protect the civil rights of the voters and a candidate to the extent of ordering a special general election. We do not think this jurisdiction would be defeated, even had the same Court lacked jurisdiction to enter an earlier ancillary order.

For the foregoing reasons, it is submitted that the Petition for Certiorari should be granted to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Respectfully submitted,

C. A. NO. 1472

ROY HUBBARD, ET AL.,
Plaintiffs,

vs.

JIM AMMERMAN, ET AL.,
Defendants.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The above entitled cause came on for hearing on the request of the Plaintiffs for a Preliminary Injunction and the Court having duly considered the verified Complaint of the Plaintiffs, the documents filed as exhibits and the evidence received by the Court, and being fully advised in the premises, now finds the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I.

Each of the Plaintiffs were on May 2, 1970, qualified voters of Harrison County, Texas, and voted for James S. Collins for Democratic nominee for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, in the Primary Election of May 2, 1970, held by the Democratic Party of Harrison County, Texas, and called "Primary Election" hereinafter.

II.

On canvass of the votes of the Primary Election, the candidate opposing James S. Collins, Honorable Jim Ammerman, was declared winner of the nomination for the office of County Judge by sixteen votes, and his name was duly certified to the County Clerk by the Democratic Executive Committee of Harrison County, Texas as the winner of the Primary Election for such office.

III.

On trial of Cause No. 25,400, Jim Ammerman v. James S. Collins, In the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, hereinafter called "the election contest", fifty-five ballots cast in the Primary Election for County Judge were thrown out as fraudulently cast, and it was determined that one of these was voted for James S. Collins, one was lost, and the remaining fifty-three were voted for Honorable Jim Ammerman.

IV.

The facts adduced on trial of the election contest suit showed that the ballots cast out were all voted as absentee ballots, and were in most instances procured and voted by those other than the voters named on the ballot, so as to amount to "ballot box stuffing".

V.

Of the fifty-five voters whose absentee ballots were thrown out, forty-nine were members of the Negro race, and six were members of the White race.

VI.

The forty-nine members of the Negro race were sent absentee ballots by reason of the work of all or a part of the members of a group of four persons, two black and two white, and most of the Negroes for whom ballots were cast neither applied for an absentee ballot nor actually voted the ones returned in their names.

VII.

The work of the four persons in procuring and voting ballots unsolicited by the voters was centered on members of the Negro race, and constituted an infringement on and a discrimination against their right to vote by reason of their race and color, as evidenced by the fact that at least two of the victims attempted to vote at the polls on election day, and were not allowed to do so because they had, without their knowledge, been voted absentee (Plaintiffs' Exhibits 12, Mose Roach, p. 169; and 14, Willie Lee Roach, p. 181).

VIII.

The deduction by the Trial Court of the fifty-three votes for Honorable Jim Ammerman from his total, and of the one vote for James S. Collins from his total, caused the Court to decree that Collins had thirty-six more legal votes than Ammerman in the Primary Election.

IX.

The casting of the fifty-three illegal absentee ballots for Ammerman operated to dilute the vote of each elector who voted for Collins in such a way as to cause Ammerman to be the apparent winner of the Primary Election, when in truth and fact the majority of the legal votes balloted were cast for James S. Collins.

X.

The judgment in the election contest suit, with ample factual support, declared the Primary Election, insofar as the nominee for County Judge of Harrison County is involved, to be invalid, and ordered the Executive Committee of the Harrison County Democratic Party, called "Committee" hereinafter, to call a new election to select a nominee for that Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

XI.

The Plaintiff in the election contest suit sought to mandamus the Committee to carry out the judgment in the election contest case, but was refused leave to file his petition by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District at Texarkana, Texas, and immediately thereafter, the Plaintiff filed a transcript and brief in that Court as an appeal from the election contest judgment

XII.

The appeal was styled, Cause No. 8012, In the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District at Texarkana, Texas, James S. Collins, Appellant v. Jim Ammerman, Appellee, and which cause will hereinafter be called "appeal".

XIII.

The Appellant Collins filed with the transcript on August 17, 1970, a Motion to Advance the Appeal, in accordance with the provisions of the Texas Election Code, and give it preference over all other cases on the docket.

XIV.

The Motion to Advance was not acted on until September 8, 1970, at which time the cause was set down for submission and oral argument on October 2, 1970, this being one day before the deadline then set by the County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas for sending in an order for printed ballots for the General Election of November, 1970, and the placing of a name thereon as Democratic nominee for County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

XV.

On September 9, 1970, the County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, conferred with his printer and revised the deadline for sending in material for printing the ballot described in the preceding paragraph to be October 7, 1970, instead of October 3, 1970, and on the same day the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals rescinded its order of September 8, 1970 and reset the appeal for submission and argument for October 6, 1970.

XVI.

A cross-appeal has been filed in the appeal by Honorable Jim Ammerman, and he has filed therein a Statement of Facts consisting of some thirteen volumes containing some four thousand pages.

XVII.

Consideration of the judgment in the election contest and the voluminous testimony that must be reviewed in determining the appeal compels the factual conclusion that the appeal and election contest suit will not be finally determined in time for the beginning of absentee balloting for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas on October 14, 1970.

XVIII.

Under the Texas practice, the appeal and election contest suit will be declared moot, and the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman would be printed on the ballot if the appeal and election contest suit is not finally determined before the deadline for ordering the printed ballots expires on October 7, 1970.

XIX.

In the event Honorable Glenn Link, County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, is not judicially ordered to do otherwise, he will on September 26, 1970 publish or post the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman as Democratic nominee for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas under the applicable provisions of the Texas election laws, and will not later than October 7, 1970 order the printed ballots for the November 1970 General Election, with the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman appearing on such ballots as the nominee of the Democratic Party of Harrison County, Texas for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

XX.

A copy of the judgment in the election contest suit was delivered to the Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of Harrison County, Texas, and on July 30, 1970 and August 14, 1970, at a meeting of the Committee, its Chairman recommended that the judgment in the election contest suit be enforced and a new election called, but the Committee refused to follow the judgment and call the election provided for therein.

XXI.

Should the appeal and election contest suit be declared moot, under the practice indicated in Finding XVIII above, the Plaintiffs and the other electors on whose behalf the Plaintiffs sue will suffer irreparable injury through the Honorable Jim Ammerman being named County Judge of Harrison County, Texas by the General Election, when in truth and fact he did not receive a majority of the legal votes cast at the Primary Election, all of which would amount to a refusal to count the votes cast by said Plaintiffs or those whom they represent, or at best a dilution of the weight to be given the same on account of the ballot stuffing found.

XXII.

No controverting affidavit was filed by any of the Defendants challenging the verified complaint of the Plaintiffs or any of the other documents on file in support of the complaint.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

From the foregoing facts the Court concludes:

I.

The Plaintiffs, and the other electors on whose behalf this action was brought, have a justiciable interest in this case by reason of the dilution of their votes through ballot box stuffing in violation of rights guaranteed them, both under the Equal Protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, and under the Voters' Rights Acts of 1964 (42 U.S.C.A., §1971, et seq.) and 1965 (42 U.S.C.A., §1973, et seq.).

II.

This Court has jurisdiction of this cause perforce the violations specified in the preceding paragraph and the provisions of the Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C.A., §1983).

III.

The Plaintiffs have exhausted all legal remedies allowed them by State procedure, and have no adequate remedy to protect their rights other than through the actions of this Court as one of equity.

IV.

Considering the relative importance of the rights asserted by the Plaintiffs and the acts sought to be enjoined, the irreparable nature of the injury that would flow from denial of preliminary relief, the probability of the ultimate success or failure to gain the entire relief sought by the Plaintiffs, and the balancing of damage and convenience generally, as well as the interest of the public, the Court concludes that a Preliminary Injunction to protect the Plaintiffs' rights should issue.

V.

The County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, his representatives, employees and successors and the members of the Harrison County Election Board, their deputies, representatives, employers and successors should be restrained and enjoined from printing or causing to appear on the ballot for the General Election of November 1970, the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman as nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, and from in any way placing anything on said printed ballot which pertains to the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

VI.

The numbers of the Harrison County Election Board, their deputies, representatives, employees and successors should be restrained and enjoined from providing any election supplies to the presiding Judges of the official election precincts of Harrison County, Texas for the November 1970 General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

VII.

Every voter and elector participating in the General Election to be held in November 1970, should be restrained and enjoined from writing in the name of the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, and the name of any person for such office on the ballot for the General Election of November 1970, and all election clerks and judges thereof should be restrained and enjoined from counting and marking any return of write-in votes for such office in said election and the Commissioners' Court of Harrison County, Texas should be restrained and enjoined from canvassing any purported returns from said election for such office and certifying the result of the same as to said office.

VIII.

The Court should retain jurisdiction in this entire cause so that proper orders may be entered as matters develop in the future.

IX.

That the action of the Democratic Executive Committee of Harrison County, Texas in refusing to call a new election amounted to State action as contemplated by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution and operated to ratify the ballot stuffing shown in the judgment in the election contest suit.

X.

The action of the State Courts of Texas in decreeing that no matter what injury to or deprivation of rights of nominees and electors in a Democratic Primary Election might be, that nevertheless if an election contest suit could not be finally determined by the last date possible for ordering printed ballots for the General Election, that the nominee certified by the Primary would have his name placed upon the ballot for the General Election amounted to State action as contemplated by the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

XI.

The members of the Negro race who did not apply for absentee ballots, and who had absentee ballots voted in their name by other persons were denied their right to vote and the same was abridged by State action on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude in violation of the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Let Preliminary Injunction issue, and Order be entered accordingly.

Signed and entered, nunc pro tunc, March 26, 1971.

CIVIL ACTION NO. 1472

ROY HUBBARD, ET AL.,

v.

JIM AMMERMAN, ET AL.

(Filed May 27, 1972)

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Intervenor, James S. Collins, and defendant, Jim Ammerman, were the candidates for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, in the Primary Election of the Democratic Party held on May 2, 1970, having duly qualified and their names having been placed on the ballot of said Primary Election.

2. On May 2, 1970, plaintiffs and intervenor were qualified voters of Harrison County, Texas, and voted in the said Primary Election for intervenor James S. Collins as Democratic nominee for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

3. Upon a canvass of the votes of the Primary Election by the Harrison County Democratic Executive Committee, defendant was declared winner of the nomination for the office of County Judge by 16 votes, 4073 to 4057, and his name was duly certified to the County Clerk by the said Executive Committee as the winner of the Primary Election for such office.

4. Intervenor timely filed and prosecuted (t)his election contest in the manner and form prescribed by the election laws of the State of Texas, alleging that certain absentee ballots by mail were illegally cast for defendant and that if said ballots were deducted from the total of defendant's votes, intervenor was the legally elected nominee.

5. Defendant joined issue in Cause No. 25,400, styled James S. Collins v. Jim Ammerman, in the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, denying the illegal votes, and alleging that a number of voters, including intervenor and certain of the plaintiffs herein, had cast illegal ballots, in that they voted in an election precinct or voting box other than that of their residence.

6. Intervenor answered, contending that such votes were not illegal, since they resulted from errors of the voter registrar in furnishing registration certificates calling for such voters to vote outside the precinct of their residence, and naming an additional number of voters who likewise voted outside the precinct of their residence by virtue of incorrect registration cards. Intervenor further alleged that there were many other voters in the same situation. Alternatively, intervenor prayed for a new election.

7. On the trial of this cause, fifty-five ballots cast for the office of County Judge in the Primary Election were adjudged to have been fraudulently cast, and it was determined that one of these was voted for intervenor, one was lost, and the remaining fifty-three were voted for defendant.

8. The deduction by the trial court of the fifty-three votes for defendant from his total, and of the one vote for intervenor from his total, caused the court to decree that intervenor had thirty-six more legal votes than defendant in the Primary Election, 4056 to 4020.

9. Of the fifty-five voters whose absentee ballots were adjudged to be illegal, forty-nine were members of the Negro race, and six were members of the White race.

10. The fact that the absentee ballots adjudged to be fraudulent were primarily cast in the names of members of the Negro race constituted an infringement on and a discrimination against their right to vote by reason of their race and color, as evidenced by the fact that at least two of the victims attempted to vote at the polls on election day, and were not allowed to do so because they had, without their knowledge, been voted absentee.

11. The casting of the fifty-three illegal absentee ballots for defendant operated to dilute the vote of each elector who voted for intervenor in such a way as to cause defendant to be the apparent winner of the Primary Election.

12. At the trial of Cause No. 25,400, styled James S. Collins v. Jim Ammerman, testimony was taken for approximately two months, following which the trial court made extensive findings of fact and conclusions of law, as well as filing an opinion. The trial was conducted in a procedurally fair manner.

13. On the 27th day of July, 1970, the judgment in the election contest suit declared the Primary Election, insofar as the nomination for County Judge of Harrison County was involved, to be invalid, and ordered the Executive Committee of the Harrison County Democratic Party to call a new election to select a nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

14. A copy of the judgment in the election contest suit was delivered to the Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of Harrison County, Texas, on July 30, 1970; but on August 14, 1970, the Committee refused to follow the judgment and call the election provided for therein.

15. Intervenor sought a writ of mandamus, to compel the committee to carry out the judgment of the state district court election contest case, but was refused leave to file his petition by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District at Texarkana, Texas; and immediately thereafter, he filed a transcript and brief in that court, as an appeal from the election contest judgment.

16. The appeal was styled "Cause No. 8012. In the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District at Texarkana, Texas, James S. Collins, Appellant v. Jim Ammerman, Appellee."

17. Intervenor filed with the transcript on August 17, 1970, a motion to advance the appeal, in accordance with the provisions of the Texas Election Code, praying that it be given preference over all other cases on the docket.

18. The motion to advance was not acted on until September 8, 1970, at which time the cause was set down for submission and oral argument on October 2, 1970, this being one day before the deadline then set by the County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, for ordering printed ballots for the General Election of November 3, 1970, and the placing of a name thereon as the Democratic nominee for County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

19. On September 9, 1970, the County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, conferred with the printer and changed the deadline for sending in material to be printed on the ballot described in the preceding paragraph to October 7, 1970 (instead of October 3, 1970). On the same day, the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals rescinded its order of September 8, 1970, and re-set the appeal for submission and argument on October 6, 1970.

20. A cross-appeal was filed by defendant. A Statement of Facts was filed, which consisted of thirteen volumes containing some 4,000 pages. Prior to the filing of such Statement of Facts, intervenor filed an application and motion to shorten the time for appeal and to shorten and condense the record on appeal.

21. On September 10, 1970, plaintiffs herein filed, in this court, an application for preliminary injunction to stay the holding of the General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas. This court concluded that it was not likely that the appeal and election contest suit could be finally determined in time for the beginning of absentee balloting for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, on October 14, 1970, because of the voluminous record to be reviewed; and an injunction was granted on September 29, 1970.

22. Under the Texas practice, the appeal and election contest suit would have been declared moot, and the name of defendant would have been printed on the ballot, if the appeal and election contest suit had not been finally determined before the deadline for ordering the printed ballots expired on October 7, 1970.

23. If the appeal and election contest suit had been declared moot, plaintiffs and the other electors on whose behalf plaintiffs sued would have suffered irreparable injury, through defendant's being named County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, at the General Election, when in truth and fact he may not have received a majority of the legal votes cast at the Primary Election.

24. It was because of the possibility that the election contest would be declared moot, and in order to allow the courts of the State of Texas to try the election contest to a conclusion on its merits, that this court abstained from making a substantive decision in this cause, but, rather, entered the preliminary injunction of September 29, 1970, enjoining the holding of a General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

25. On October 6, 1970, the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals rendered its opinion holding that the District Court of Harrison County had no authority to call a new election and ordering it to proceed with the re-trial and recount of ballots to ascertain the true results of the election.

26. After a two day re-trial, or a continuation of the first trial, the District Court of Harrison County entered its judgment on October 12, 1970, declaring the intervenor to be the nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of the County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, by 3,960 to 3,945 votes.

27. Continuing to follow the doctrine of abstention, this Court, on October 13, 1970, held in effect the preliminary injunction of September 29, 1970, at the request of counsel for defendants, who expressed a desire to appeal from the October 12, 1970, judgment of the state district court; and, further, this court refused to order the name of intervenor certified to the County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, as the nominee of the Democratic Party for the General Election, as moved by counsel for plaintiffs.

28. Defendant prosecuted an appeal from the October 12, 1970, judgment of the District Court of Harrison County, Texas; and such appeal was perfected on December 7, 1970. In anticipation of this action, intervenor had filed with the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals a motion to advance the cause. Intervenor filed his brief on December 10, 1970. Defendant filed his brief as appellant on December 29, 1970; and intervenor filed his brief as cross-appellant (on costs) on January 15, 1971. The motion to advance was acted upon on December 22, 1970; and the appeal was set for hearing for January 26, 1971.

29. On March 9, 1971, the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, held that it had been ousted of jurisdiction by reason of the preliminary injunction issued by this Court on September 29, 1970, and declared that the election contest was moot, refusing to consider the intervenor's appeal from the costs assessed in the October 12, 1970, judgment of the state district court.

30. On the first appeal of the contest, the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals adjudged costs against intervenor. At the same term of court intervenor filed a motion for the court to readjudge and reassess costs. Intervenor subsequently requested the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals to treat said motion to readjudge and reassess costs as if filed in the second appeal, and to consider it along with the intervenor's appeal from that part of the judgment that assessed costs against intervenor and his bondsmen.

31. Notwithstanding the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, that it had no jurisdiction to consider the adjudication of costs, it nevertheless did judicially consider the costs, and did assess them against the intervenor and his bondsmen in its mandate of March 9, 1971.

32. On March 10, 1971, the day after the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, issued its mandate ordering the District Court to dismiss the contest suit, defendant issued a press release stating that he would continue to serve as County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, for the full four year term beginning January 1, 1971, unless he decided to resign earlier.

33. On March 15, 1971, defendant filed a motion in the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, to dismiss Cause No. 25,400, styled James S. Collins v. Jim Ammerman, which motion prayed the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, to assess costs against intervenor and the sureties on intervenor's bond.

34. Intervenor filed an application for temporary restraining order in this court against the Clerk of the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, the Clerk of the Court of Civil Appeals, defendant, and the Honorable John Furrh, District Judge of Harrison County, Texas, to prevent the dismissal of the election contest and the assessment of costs against intervenor and his sureties. The restraining order was granted on March 19, 1971, and was continued in force and effect by agreement of the parties, made in open court, on March 26, 1971.

35. The court infers from the record, and finds as a fact, that the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, made a studied and deliberate attempt to avoid deciding the election contest case on its merits prior to the date of the holding of the General Election on November 3, 1970, so as to be able to declare the election contest moot, and thus avoid deciding the case on its merits.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The mootness doctrine, enunciated in Polk v. Davidson, 145 Tex. 200, 196 S.W. 2d 632 (1946) and subsequent cases cited by the defendant Ammerman in his brief and sought to be applied by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, results inevitably in the denial to the electors who voted for the contestant in an election contest of the right to vote and to have one's vote counted, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

2. The mootness doctrine enables any contestee in an election contest, with minimal diligence, to delay the conclusion on its merits of a primary election contest until such time as the State courts will declare such contest moot. Therefore, the mootness doctrine denies the voters who voted for contestant any effectiveness for their votes, when such votes have been or would be determined in the trial of an election contest to be a majority of the votes legally cast for the office in question.

3. The enforcement of the mootness doctrine by the Texas courts, particularly the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals, amounts to State action and constitutes a custom and usage employed and enforced by the State to deprive the plaintiff and intervenor of their constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment.

4. The plaintiffs, and other electors on whose behalf this action was brought, have a justifiable (justiciable) interest in this case by reason of the dilution of their votes through ballot box stuffing in violation of rights guaranteed them, under the Equal Protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, the Voters' Rights Acts of 1964 (42 U.S.C.A., §1971, et seq.) and 1965 (42 U.S.C.A., §1973, et seq.) and the Civil Rights Act of 1871 (42 U.S.C.A. §1983 and 28 U.S.C.A. §1343(3) and (4)).

5. The members of the Negro race who did not apply for absentee ballots, and who had absentee ballots voted in their name by other persons were denied their right to vote and the same was abridged by State action on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude in violation of the Fifteenth Amendment, and in violation of the Voters Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C.A. §1971, et seq., the Voters Rights Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C.A. §1973, et seq. and the Civil Rights Act of 1871, 42 U.S.C.A. §1983.

6. This court properly exercised its equity powers pursuant to 28 U.S.C.A. §1343 (3) and (4), 42 U.S.C.A. §1971 et seq., 42 U.S.C.A. §1973, and 42 U.S.C.A. §1983 et seq. to enjoin the holding of the General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, in order to protect the voters who voted for the contestant from deprivation of their right to vote and to have their vote counted by the use of the mootness doctrine.

7. This court, having enjoined the holding of the General Election on November 3, 1970, in order to permit the State courts to conclude the election contest suit and thereby finally dispose of the constitutional and federal law questions raised and the State courts having concluded their consideration of the litigation by refusing to exercise their jurisdiction to act preserved for these courts by the preliminary injunction, thus bringing to an end the basis for abstention, this court has power to protect the rights of the intervenor and plaintiffs by ordering the name of the intervenor placed on the ballot for a General Election, and ordering the holding of such an election.

8. Because it is necessary in aid of its jurisdiction previously exercised, and in order to protect and effectuate its judgment previously entered, this court may enjoin the enforcement of the judgment and mandate of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, dismissing the election contest.

9. Because 42 U.S.C.A. §1983 constitutes an expressly authorized exception to the Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C.A. §2283, this court may enjoin enforcement of such judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, in order to vindicate Fourteenth Amendment rights of the electors who voted for the contestant, intervenor James S. Collins. Alternatively, 28 U.S.C.A. §2283 does not apply at all to 42 U.S.C.A. §1983.

10. By refusing to consider the issues in the election contest, the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals denied to the voters of Harrison County, Texas, their rights under the Due Process and Equal Protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment, the Voters' Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C.A. §1971, et seq., the Voters' Rights Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C.A. §1973, et seq., and the Civil Rights Act of 1871, 42 U.S.C.A. §1983.

11. The findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the trial judge in support of his opinion and judgment of July 27, 1970, in Cause No. 25,400 were the result of full litigation between the intervenor, James S. Collins, and the defendant, Jim Ammerman, on the issues determined therein. The defendant, Jim Ammerman, having challenged the findings and conclusions with respect to the absentee votes thrown out by the trial judge, and those findings and conclusions not having been disputed by the Texarkana Court of Civil Appeals in its reversal of the July 27, 1970, judgment for trial of factual issues pertaining to other matters, Ammerman cannot now complain that the trial court's findings and conclusions as to the absentee votes were not dispositive of the legality of said votes.

12. Since the Court of Civil Appeals refused to pass upon the merits of the election contest appeal, the decision of the District Judge of Harrison County, Texas, 71st Judicial District, was the last State court ruling on the issues of the election contest. Thus, the doctrine of collateral estoppel comes into play, and the defendants are estopped to deny or question the findings of fact and conclusions of law entered by the trial judge, the Honorable John Furrh, on October 12, 1970.

13. Fundamental considerations of equity prohibit this court from giving credence to the merely formal canvass of votes by the Harrison County Democratic Executive Committee, rather than to the results of the lengthy and extensive proceedings in the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, 71st Judicial District, in the election contest brought by intervenor, James S. Collins, against defendant, Jim Ammerman.

14. The effort of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, to judicially determine who should pay the costs in the election contest proceedings, after it had denied the intervenor, James S. Collins, the right of a hearing on the subject because said court lacked jurisdiction to consider the motion and appeal of said intervenor on the question of costs, amounted to a denial to the intervenor of equal protection of the law, and the taking of his property without due process, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

15. To avoid irreparable damage that would result to the plaintiffs and intervenor if equitable relief not be given them in this proceeding, it is necessary that this court grant a permanent injunction against Mrs. Lonnie E. Henry, Clerk of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, and against Jack S. Moore, Clerk of the 71st Judicial District Court of Harrison County, Texas, enjoining each of such officers from levying execution for costs against the intervenor and his bondsmen in the election contest case.

16. The temporary restraining order against the Judge of the 71st Judicial District Court of Harrison County, Texas, should be enlarged to enjoin said judge from setting aside the judgment of October 12, 1970 or dismissing the election contest. In order to avoid irreparable damage to the intervenor, he should be declared the winner of the May 2, 1970 primary election for the nomination of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

17. This court is lawfully entitled to enter an order directing that the name of James S. Collins be placed upon the ballot for the special general election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, which will be ordered subsequently by the court.

SIGNED and ENTERED this 27th day of May, 1971.

COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS
SIXTH DISTRICT
TEXARKANA, TEXAS

No. 8031

JIM AMMERMAN,
Appellant,

vs.

JAMES S. COLLINS,
Appellee and Cross-Appellant.

Appeal from the District Court of Harrison County, Texas

(Reported 464 S.W.2d 184)

This is the second appeal of the First Democratic Primary Election contest for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas. The First Democratic Primary Election was held on May 2, 1970. There were only two candidates for the office: Hon. Jim Ammerman, hereinafter referred to as Ammerman, County Judge of Harrison County; and James S. Collins, hereinafter referred to as Collins.

A canvass of the votes showed that Ammerman received 4,073 votes and Collins received 4,057 votes. Ammerman was certified as the Democratic nominee for the office of County Judge of Harrison County at the General Election to be held on November 3, 1970.

On May 14, 1970, Collins filed a contest of the First Democratic Primary Election against Ammerman. On July 27, 1970, the Trial Judge entered an opinion in which he held the election for County Judge was invalid and directed the Harrison County Democratic Executive Committee to call a new Special Democratic Primary Election for the office of County Judge as between Ammerman and Collins. There is no provision of the Texas Constitution, nor the Election Code of the State of Texas, whereby any such election could be held; and, definitely no provision whereby the expenses of printing the ballots and holding the Special Democratic Primary Election could be paid for, either by the candidates or by the county. Both Collins and Ammerman appealed from that opinion. This Court, not being apprised of the fact that the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas, Marshall Division, hereinafter referred to as U.S. District Court, had acquired, or assumed, jurisdiction of the contested First Democratic Primary Election case. We proceeded to enter an opinion on October 6, 1970, Collins vs. Ammerman, C.C.A., 1970, 459 S.W. 2d 891, in which we directed that the Trial Court hear all the evidence if it could do so and render a final judgment in time for the ballots to be printed, so that absentee voting could begin twenty days prior to November 3, 1970, General Election.

As far as we know, the Harrison County Democratic Executive Committee did not call the Special Democratic Primary Election. Neither have we been informed of the fact that they have been cited for Contempt of Court for failing to do so.

Thereafter, the Trial Court entered a judgment in which it certified that Collins had received a majority of the legal votes cast in the First Democratic Primary Election and ordered Collins certified as the nominee of the Democratic Party for the Office of County Judge. As will later be shown, the Trial Court had no jurisdiction in the case because it had been acquired, or assumed, by the U.S. District Court. Anyway, Ammerman excepted to the judgment of the Court, gave notice of appeal and filed an Appeal Bond within five days thereafter. The judgment of the Trial Court is not dated. It was filed on October 12, 1970, just two (2) days before absentee voting was to commence in the General Election.

Sometime prior to September 29, 1970, a suit was filed in the U.S. District Court, apparently as a class action, by Roy Hubbard, et al, plaintiffs, vs. Jim Ammerman, et al, defendants, Civil Action No. 1472, contesting the results of the First Democratic Primary Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County. The pleadings do not appear in the record of this case. Ammerman filed a motion to dismiss the case which was overruled. The U.S. District Court entered a preliminary injunction, stating that, after due notice consideration of verified pleadings, all instruments on file as exhibits and having heard testimony from witnesses, he entered the preliminary injunction. It read as follows:

"IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
MARSHALL DIVISION

"Roy Hubbard, et al., Plaintiffs, vs. Jim Ammerman, et al., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 1472

"ORDER GRANTING PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

"The Defendant's, Ammerman, Motion to Dismiss this cause, having been heard before trial on September 25, 1970, was in all things overruled, to which Defendant Ammerman excepted.

"Due notice having been given Defendants, the Plaintiffs' request for a Preliminary Injunction was then presented on the same date, and the Court having considered the verified Complaint and all instruments on file as exhibits, as well as having heard testimony from witnesses, and have considered the arguments of counsel and being fully advised in the premises, finds:

"That from the opinion of the District Court of Harrison County, Texas in Cause No. 25,400, James S. Collins v. Jim Ammerman, and evidence presented on this hearing, it appears that there is possibility that fraud has so permeated the Democratic Primary Election for a nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, as that the votes of persons who cast legal ballots may have been diluted.

"There is also a distinct possibility that a decision of said Cause No. 25,400 on an appeal that has been taken to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas sitting at Texarkana, Texas, may not be disposed of until after said Cause has become moot.

"The Court is of the opinion that unless Honorable Glenn Link, County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, be restrained from placing the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman on the ballot for the General Election, as the nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, the appeal of said election contest, No. 25,400, may not be finally determined, and further that the Plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury unless a Preliminary Injunction be granted.

"It is therefore, ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that pending further Order of this Court, the Honorable Glenn Link, County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, his deputies, representatives and employees and successors be, and he and they are, hereby restrained and enjoined from printing or causing to appear on the ballot for the General Election of November, 1970, the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman as nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, and from in any way placing anything on said printed ballot which pertains to the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

"It is also ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that the Defendants Glenn Link, N. F. Shivers, K. Harold Brown, Doyle Curry and Jim Ammerman, individually and in their official capacities as the Harrison County Election Board, their deputies, representatives, employees and successors, all be and they are hereby restrained and enjoined from providing any election supplies to the presiding judges of the official election precincts of Harrison County, Texas for the November, 1970, General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, until further ORDER of this Court, and that said parties individually and in the capacity named be enjoined from holding an election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, in the 1970 General Election.

"It is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that pending the further order of this Court, each and every voter and elector participating in the General Election to be held in November, 1970 is hereby restrained and enjoined from writing in the name of the office of County Judge of Harrison County, and the name of any person for such office on the ballot of the General Election of November, 1970 and all election clerks and judges are hereby restrained and enjoined from counting and making any return of write-in votes for such office in said election and the Commissioners Court of Harrison County, Texas is hereby restrained and enjoined from canvassing any purported returns from said election for such office and from certifying the results of any such returns as to said office.

"It is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that this order shall be effective from and after 5:00 p.m. September 25, 1970.

"SIGNED and ENTERED this 29th day of September, 1970.

Emphasis added.

The above temporary injunction by the U.S. District Court, having been filed in the State Court and brought forward in the transcript, puts this Court on notice that the U.S. District Court has acquired, or assumed, jurisdiction in this case. The U.S. District Court did not follow the requirements of Title 42 U.S. Code Sec. 1973j-(d) which requires the United States Attorney General to take the first action for any relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction, restraining order or other action including an order directed to the United States or any local election officials required by them. There is no showing in the temporary injunction that it was brought by the United States Attorney General. Neither did the United States Court follow the law as written in Title 42 U.S. Code Sec. 1973b-(a) requiring that any such action as to any voters in a State Election shall be heard and determined by a court of three Federal Judges.

There was no reasonable excuse for not following the requirements of the United States Code. Gray vs. Maine, D.C. Ala. 1968, 291 F. Supp. 998; State of S.C. vs. Katzenbech, S.P.D. 1966, 86 S. Ct. 803, 383 U.S. 301, 15 L. Ed. 2nd 769; Apache County vs. V.S.D.C., 1966, 256 F. Supp. 903; Garza vs. Smith, U.S. Dist. Ct. Western Div. of Tex., 1970, not yet printed. In any case, the burden of proof is upon the complaining parties of a state or political subdivision seeking a declaratory judgment or a preliminary injunction to prove that some effective rights have been abridged, or the right to vote because of race or color has been incurred. Gaston County, N.C. vs. U.S., D. Ct. 1969, 89 S. Ct. 1720; 395 U.S. 26, 23 L. Ed. 2d 309. Collins seems to rely on Hadnot vs. Amos, Ala. 1969, 9 S. Ct. 1101, 394 U.S. 358, 22 L. Ed. 2d 336. This suit was brought by the United States Attorney General, or under his instructions, and was heard before three Federal Judges. It was brought under the Civil Rights Act and the Alabama Corrupt Practice Act, Code of Alabama, Title 17, Sec. 274, 413 & 414. In that case, certain county officials, by certain maneuvers, had prevented Negro people from having their names printed on the Democratic ballot. There are other cases cited that have to do with the qualifications of the voters in a State Election or a subdivision thereof. The U.S. District Court, in the case at Bar, did not require any certification of any violation of any Civil Rights Act, or anything that was detrimental to any person or group of persons, nor did he acquire the assistance of two other judges to assist him in entering the temporary injunction.

Only one U.S. District Judge acquired, or assumed, jurisdiction and issued a temporary injunction in a contested Democratic Primary Election case in which he says that he heard evidence. The U.S. District Court says it appears there is a possibility that fraud has been committed in the First Democratic Primary Election for a nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge, and the votes of some persons who cast legal ballots may have been diluted. He had no jurisdiction to make any such holding or findings of fact.

The U.S. District Court enjoined and restrained Hon. Glenn Link, County Clerk of Harrison County, from placing the name of Ammerman on the General Election ballot as the nominee of the Democratic Party. A careful reading of the foregoing temporary injunction, actually, was that all of the qualified voters of Harrison County were not permitted to vote for a County Judge in the General Election. It seems to this writer that the U.S. District Court violated the Civil Rights of all the people who held voting certificates by the temporary injunction in not allowing them to vote for a County Judge in the General Election held on November 3, 1970.

This is only a Democratic Primary Contested Election case between Collins and Ammerman under Art. 13.30, Tex. Election Code, as to who received the most legal votes. The winner in the contested election was to be certified the Democratic Nominee for the office of County Judge of Harrison County. I cannot find where there has been any violation of any Federal or State law whatever. The U.S. District Court should not have acquired, or assumed, jurisdiction and issued the temporary restraining order. I hope the readers of this opinion will carefully study the temporary injunction, and read the Federal Statutes cited.

It used to be the law in Texas that when a person would file a Workmen's Compensation Case in State Court and the defendant was a foreign corporation, they would file a petition to remove the case to Federal Court. When this would happen, the State Court lost all jurisdiction it ever had. It is just that simple. There are no Federal Constitutional Provision, United States Statutes or Federal Rules of Procedure that give a single United States District Judge, or any Appellate Federal Court, the power, privilege, right or authority to supervise the trial of a Civil case that is pending in a State Court. If the United States District Court had not acquired, or assumed, jurisdiction, all the issues presented by this appeal would have become moot. This Court would be without any jurisdiction to enter any judgment whatever. Polk vs. Davidson, S. Ct. 1946, 196 S.W. 2d 632; 44 T.L.R. 322 (1965), "A Problem of Appellant Delays in Election Contests." If there had been any violation of any voting rights or any Civil Rights Act and the U.S. Attorney General had certified the facts as required by the Federal Statutes or filed the suit in Federal Court, then it would have taken three Federal Judges to have acquired jurisdiction.

There are some other cases that give a single U.S. District Judge jurisdiction: diversity of citizenship; interstate commerce; labor relations and many others. They are described in detail in Volume(s) 36 and 36A of Corpus Juris Secundum.

There is only one thing that this Court can do: Set aside the judgment of the District Court and remand the case with instructions to dismiss the contested election case from its docket.

No motion for rehearing will be allowed to be filed.

It is so ordered.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas

(September 6, 1972)

Before WISDOM, COLEMAN and SIMPSON,
Circuit Judges.

COLEMAN, Circuit Judge: This litigation began in the 71st Judicial District of Texas as a local election contest to determine who had received the majority of the votes legally cast in a Democratic primary for the nomination of a candidate for County Judge in Harrison County, Texas.

In the manner hereinafter described, the controversy got into the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas. The result was a head-on collision between that Court and the Texas Court of Civil Appeals, with the Federal District Court ultimately deciding this local contest.

For reasons presently to appear, we are of the opinion that the District Court should not have assumed jurisdiction of this controversy.

Its judgment is reversed. The case is remanded with directions that the District Court shall vacate its judgment, dissolve its permanent injunction, and dismiss the case from its docket.

I

The Controversy

In the Democratic Party primary to select a nominee for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, held May 2, 1970, there were two candidates. One was Jim Ammerman, the incumbent. The other was James S. Collins. After canvassing the election returns, the County Democratic Executive Committee found that Ammerman had received 4,073 votes and Collins had received 4,057 votes. Ammerman, therefore was certified as the Democratic nominee for County Judge.

As authorized by Article 13.30 of the Texas Election Code,[1] Collins instituted an election contest in the 71st

1. Art. 13.30 Contest of primary nominations

(1) The district court shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all contests for nominations growing out of primary elections.

(3) Any candidate desiring to contest the result of any primary election in which he was a candidate shall file his Judicial District of Harrison County, praying that the certificate issued to Ammerman be set aside and that Collins be declared the Democratic nominee. Collins alleged that absentee ballots had been illegally cast by mail for his opponent, that other spurious ballots had likewise been cast. This Ammerman denied and counterclaimed that a number of illegal ballots had been cast for Collins by non-residents of the precincts in which they had been allowed to vote.

suit in the district court within ten days from the date of canvass of the results of the election by the state executive committee in the case of a state-wide office or a district office in a district which includes territory situated in more than one county, and within ten days from the date of canvass by the county executive committee in the case of a county or precinct office or a district office in a district which consists of only one county or part of one county. Process with a true copy of the petition or complaint attached thereto shall be served upon the opposite party as in other civil suits, except that the return day thereof shall be fixed by the district judge. If the contestee cannot be found within the county in which the contest is filed, service may be had upon the agent or attorney of the contestee, or by leaving the process with some person over the age of sixteen years at the usual place of abode or business of the contestee, or his last address. If service cannot be effected within three days in any of the above methods, service upon the contestee may be had by serving the county clerk in the county where suit is filed, and any candidate who files for a place on the ballot in the primary election shall thereby appoint such county clerk as his agent to receive service for him under the circumstances above set forth. If a candidate for a district office in a district which includes territory situated in more than one county files a contest in one or more counties without filing a contest in every county having territory within the district, the contestee shall have five days from the date of first service of process on him in the suit or suits filed by the contestant, in which to file a contest in such other counties of the district as he may desire to do. In a suit filed by a contestee under the authorization of the preceding sentence, the parties shall be designated, and the suit shall proceed, in the same manner as original contests filed under this Section. Nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the contestee in a pending suit from himself filing a contest as a contestant, within ten days from the applicable date of canvass, in the district court of any county having venue of the contest preceding.

Subsequently, Collins amended his pleadings to request that a new primary be ordered, asserting that so many illegal votes had been cast that the election should be declared void.

Ammerman contended that under the applicable Texas statute the Court had jurisdiction only to decide the true result of the election as determined by the votes legally cast, a position supported by the prior decisions in Nesbitt v. Coburn, 143 S.W.2d 229 (1940) and Scruggs v. Perkins, 233 S.W.2d 913 (1950), decisions of the Texas Court of Civil Appeals, which has final jurisdiction of such matters in Texas, Article 13.30(12), Texas Election Code.

If the district court be then in session, the judge thereof shall set the said contest for trial at a date not more than ten (10) days from the date of the filing of said contest. If the district court be not in session at said time, the judge thereof shall order a special term of said court to be convened not later than ten (10) days from the filing of such contest for the hearing of same, and in either case, the said contest shall have precedence over all other matters.

After an extended trial which generated a testimonial transcript in excess of 4,000 pages, and despite the appellate decisions just cited, the Texas trial court, on July 27, 1970, entered its judgment setting aside the May 2 primary and ordering a new primary be held for the selection of a Democratic nominee for the office of County Judge.

charged, if such charges of fraud or illegality be supported by some evidence, or by affidavit of reputable persons, and the ends of justice seem to require it, the court shall have authority to unseal and reopen the ballot boxes to determine controverted issues, and the court may recount, or under its direction cause to be recounted, the ballots cast in any or all precincts of the county to determine the true result of such election. In all such cases in which a reopening of ballot boxes is ordered, the court shall exercise all due diligence to preserve the secrecy of the ballots, and upon completion of such recount, the said ballot boxes with their original contents shall be resealed and redelivered to the county clerk.

The trial Court shall further fix a time within which the record in the trial Court shall be filed in the appellate Court, and make all such other orders in the cause as in his discretion may be necessary and expedient in order to expedite such appeal.

(12) In all contests for party nominations filed in the district courts under authority of this Act, either party thereto may appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals for that particular Supreme Judicial district, which appeal shall be advanced upon the docket of said court and shall have precedence over all other cases. Provided, that no appeal in such cases shall be dismissed as moot merely because of possible interference with the printing of the official ballot unless the appellant has been guilty of negligence in perfecting and prosecuting such appeal, but such appellate court shall retain jurisdiction of such appeal and expeditiously dispose of same. Upon decision of the appeal by the Court of Civil Appeals no motion for rehearing shall be filed except with approval of the court given within three (3) days after such decision. The Supreme Court of Texas shall have no jurisdiction to review any election contest filed under this Act by writ of error, certified question, or any other manner. Acts 1951, 52nd Leg., p. 1097, ch. 492, art. 208.

The next step, [Article 13.30(12), Texas Election Code] was an appeal to the Texas Court of Civil Appeals.

Collins had insisted in the District Court that a new election be ordered, but he argued on appeal that he should have been declared the nominee.

Ammerman likewise appealed, contending that the local Texas Court should have decided the winner and was without authority to order a new primary.

The appeals were duly docketed in the Texas Court of Civil Appeals at Texarkana.

To this point, the case was nothing more than an ordinary, often encountered, contest to decide who had received a majority of the legally cast votes for a nomination in a County Democratic primary.

The matter, however, was not allowed to follow the usual course through the Texas state court system.

While the appeals filed by both Collins and Ammerman were pending in the duly designated Texas court of last resort, Roy Hubbard and numerous others, who had not been candidates in the primary, who had no claim to the nomination, on September 10, 1970, filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas, at Marshall.

Some of the complainants if not all of them, had sought to intervene in the Texas District Court case but their intervention had been denied. From this action they did not appeal to the Texas Court of Civil Appeals.

The federal complaint alleged that the plaintiffs had voted in the primary and had voted for James S. Collins. Asserting a class action on behalf of themselves and all others who had voted for Collins, contending that they were seeking to enforce their rights under the Voting Rights Act of 1964 and 1965, and seeking "to protect their rights of suffrage and of having their votes counted under the provisions of 42 U.S.C.A., §1983(1)", these voters attached a copy of the judgment of the District Court of Harrison County ordering a new election, as well as a transcript of the official proceedings in that Court. It was charged that the ballot boxes had been stuffed with the absentee ballots of persons [Negroes] who, in fact, had not voted those ballots. Further, ballots had been illegally cast wherein the applications for the ballot contained no signature and likewise constituted ballot box stuffing. It was claimed that a majority of all the allegedly illegal votes were cast by or in the name of Negroes, and that this "action of the supporters of the defendant Ammerman" constituted preying upon the Negro race, and the illiterates thereof, so as to deprive them of the right to cast a free ballot, on account of their race and color, in contravention of the Voting Rights Acts and the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution. It was further alleged that these ballots had been cast in violation of Texas law, that in the state court trial Ammerman had sought to have the ballots of 152 voters declared illegal because they had voted in a precinct where they did not reside, and that to permit the certification of Ammerman as the Democratic nominee would dilute the vote of the complainants and all others who voted for Collins, in violation of the "one person-one vote" rule. It was ultimately alleged that Ammerman was maneuvering to delay the appeal to the Texas Court of Civil Appeals beyond the date when it would be possible to print the general election ballots, thus mooting the contest. These allegations will be subjected to more extensive description infra.

It was prayed that the appearance of Jim Ammerman's name on the general election ballot as the nominee of the Democratic Party be enjoined by the federal district court, that a new primary election for the nomination of county judge be ordered, and that no general election for the office of county judge be allowed until such primary could be completed.

The District Court set a hearing for September 25 as to preliminary injunctive and mandatory relief.

Collins was not named as a party plaintiff or defendant to the federal court suit, but Ammerman was made a defendant. Ammerman filed a motion to dismiss the complaint on the ground that on its face the action (1) had been prematurely instituted; that (2) it raised no substantial federal question; that (3) the judgment of the Texas district court was not a final judgment because of the pending appeals to the Texas Court of Civil Appeals; that (4) in his Texas appeal James S. Collins had contended that a judgment should be rendered declaring him to be the nominee; that (5) the defendant Ammerman had contended in the appellate court that the district court erred in ordering a new election; that (6) the complaint constituted an effort to have the United States District Court review as an appellate court, the action of the state court with reference to the election contest; and that (7) the district court was without jurisdiction of the cause. Ammerman also filed an answer reiterating the factual basis upon which it was contended that he had won the primary.

On September 29, 1970, the United States District Court denied the motion to dismiss and granted a preliminary injunction, saying that from an examination of the opinion of the state district court and from evidence presented at the hearing, "it appears that there is the possibility that fraud has so permeated the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, that the votes of persons who cast legal ballots may have been diluted. * * * * There is also a distinct possibilty that a decision [of the case] on an appeal that has been taken to the Court of Civil Appeals may not be disposed of until after said Cause has become moot". [Emphasis added].

On these premises, the United States District Court did not order a new primary but, until further ordered, unconditionally enjoined the appearance of Ammerman's name on the general election ballot as a Democratic nominee, enjoined the Harrison County Election Board from providing any election supplies for use in the general election for county judge, and enjoined the holding of a general election for the office of county judge. Moreover, "every voter and elector participating in the general election to be held in November, 1970, (although not parties to the litigation) were enjoined from writing in a name for the office of county judge on the general election ballot". Additionally, "all election clerks and judges" were enjoined from counting or returning such write-in votes. A copy of the order granting the preliminary injunction will be annexed to this opinion as Appendix A.

On October 6, 1970, unaware of the federal district court injunction, the Texas Court of Civil Appeals heard oral argument and, the same day, decided the appeals taken to that Court by Collins and Ammerman [Collins v. Ammerman, 459 S.W.2d 891]. The Texas appellate court recited the history of the litigation and held that the state trial court should have decided which ballots were legal, which were illegal, who received the most of the votes legally cast, and who had been nominated. It further held that it could not, on the record before it, decide the case on the merits because the state district court had erroneously denied Ammerman the opportunity to introduce evidence of certain votes cast illegally against him.

The case was remanded to the state district court with directions [on the basis of the record already compiled and on such additional evidence as might be necessary] to decide the contest before October 13, 1970. The Court of Civil Appeals specifically directed that no petition for rehearing would be entertained, that the mandate of the court would issue instanter, and that the Clerk should without delay furnish the trial court with a copy of the opinion, etc.

The trial court proceeded immediately to retry the case and six days after the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals entered judgment that Collins had won the Democratic primary for county judge by a margin of fifteen votes. Acting in accordance with the mandate of the Court of Civil Appeals the district court also entered judgment against Collins and his sureties for the costs of the first trial. Ammerman was taxed with the costs of the second trial.

Ammerman then appealed this judgment [dated October 12, 1970]. Collins also appealed that part of the judgment which had taxed him with the costs of the first trial as directed by the Texas Court of Civil Appeals.

Then came a period in which the United States District Court took no action, the Texas Court of Civil Appeals rendered no decision, the date of the general election passed, there was no election for county judge, and matters remained status quo until March 9, 1971.

On that date [Ammerman v. Collins, 464 S.W.2d 184], the Texas Court of Civil Appeals, in a formal opinion, stated that at the time of its prior decision it had not been apprised of the federal injunction. It then proceeded to set aside the state district court judgment of October 12 on the ground that the United States District Court had acquired or assumed jurisdiction over the controversy by its preliminary injunction of September 29 and that, in any event, under Texas law, the contest not having been finally decided before the general election, the case was moot. The Texas district court was directed to dismiss the contested election case from its docket.

The March, 1971, decision of the Court of Civil Appeals started the wheels turning again at the United States Courthouse. Collins, the contestant in the state courts, moved to be allowed to intervene in the Federal Court case as one having a vital interest in the subject matter of the case, both as a voter and as the legal nominee for the office of county judge. March 19, 1971, the motion was granted and Collins filed his plea of intervention the same day.

We consider it unnecessary to detail the other skirmishing and maneuvering except to say that the case was sent to trial on the merits in the Federal District Court on April 21, 1971.

On May 27, 1971, the District Court filed findings of fact and conclusions of law, followed by a sweeping injunction.

It will be remembered that a total of 8,130 votes were purportedly cast in the Democratic primary. Adopting the findings of the state district court, the United States District Judge held that fifty-five absentee ballots were illegally cast, all by Negroes except six; that at least two of these Negroes upon going to the polls to vote in person were denied the right to vote because they, unknown to them, had been voted by absentee ballot; that the casting of absentee ballots in this fashion constituted an infringement on and a discrimination against the right of these Negroes to vote by reason of their race and color; that this operated to "dilute the vote of each elector who voted for Collins in such a way as to cause Ammerman to be the apparent winner of the primary election".

In paragraph 35, the District Court found as a fact "that the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Texarkana, made a studied and deliberate attempt to avoid deciding the election contest case on its merits prior to the date of the holding of the General Election on November 3, 1970, so as to be able to declare the election contest moot, and thus avoid deciding the case on its merits".

It was held, as a matter of law, that the mootness doctrine, a part of the law of Texas by enunciation in Polk v. Davidson, 145 Tex. 200, 196 S.W.2d 632 (1946), and subsequent cases as applied by the Texas Court of Civil Appeals, is unconstitutional; that members of the Negro race who did not apply for absentee ballots and who had absentee ballots voted in their name by other persons were denied their right to vote and the same was abridged by state action on account of race; that the district court had the right to order a general election with the name of Collins on the ballot; that the district court in aid of its jurisdiction previously exercised could enjoin the enforcement of the judgment and mandate of the Court of Civil Appeals dismissing the election contest; that because of 42 U.S.C.A., §1983 the Anti-Injunction Act [28 U.S.CA.. §2283] did not apply; that since the Court of Civil Appeals did not have jurisdiction to hear the first appeal it did not have jurisdiction to assess costs against Collins; that Collins should be declared the winner of the primary of May 2, 1970. Judgment was accordingly entered, it being directed that no name but that of Collins should be placed on the general election ballot as a candidate for county judge [Transcript, 233]. In other words, the United States District Court, by its judgment, in effect, named Collins as the County Judge of Harrison County.

The judgment of the District Court was stayed by this Court, pending appeal.

II

Some Preliminary Observations

On February 15, 1972, the Supreme Court of the United States decided Roundebush v. Hartke, 405 U.S. 15, 92 S.Ct. 804, ... L.Ed.2d ..... The case involved a contest (recount) of the certified general election results in the race for United States Senator from Indiana.

The Democratic nominee had been certified. In the appropriate state court the Republican nominee filed a timely petition for a recount. In accordance with Indiana law, the Court appointed a three-man recount commission and directed it to begin the recount on December 8. The Democratic nominee then sought, in the United States District Court, to enjoin the recount. A district judge issued a temporary restraining order until the matter could be heard and decided by a three-judge United States District Court. The state attorney general intervened. The three-judge district court interlocutorily enjoined the recount, 321 F. Supp. 1370. This was appealed to the Supreme Court.

Since the Senate had seated Hartke without prejudice to the outcome of the appeal, the Supreme Court declined to consider the appeal moot. It held that Article 1, §4 of the United States Constitution specifically empowers the states, in the absence of Congressional enactment, to regulate the conduct of Senatorial elections:

> "The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Place of Cushing Senators."

Obviously, a recount is simply an election contest, and the Supreme Court held that "A recount is an integral part of the Indiana electoral process and is within the ambit of the broad powers delegated to the States by Article 1, §4".

Citing Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355 (1932) the Supreme Court defined these broad powers:

> "It cannot be doubted that these comprehensive words embrace authority to provide a complete code for congressional elections, not only as to times and places, but in relation to notices, registration, supervision of voting, protection of voters, prevention of fraud and corrupt practices, counting of votes, duties of inspectors and canvassers, and making and publication of election returns; in short, to enact numerous requirements as to procedure and safeguards which experience shows are necessary in order to enforce the fundamental right involved." 405 U.S. at 24.

If the States have these broad powers as to the conduct of elections for federal office, a fortiori they certainly have them, if they choose to exercise them, as to elections held for state and local offices. Therefore, Texas has the power to control the disposition of contest over elections to its state and local offices.

"The Texas Statutes afford machinery for such a contest as part of their provision for both party nominations and final elections," Johnson v. Stevenson, 5 Cir., 1948, 170 F.2d 108, cert. denied 336 U.S. 904.

It is elementary, of course, that United States District Courts have only such jurisdiction as conferred by an Act of Congress under Article III, §2 of the Constitution. Except for the narrow exception set forth in 28 U.S.C., §1344, (of which, more later) there is no Act of Congress which has conferred upon federal district courts jurisdiction to hear and decide, solely as an election contest, what candidate received a majority of the votes legally cast in an election for state or local office.

Even as to state courts, there is no inherent power to determine election contests, and such can become a judicial function only when, and to the extent, authorized by statute, 26 Am. Jur.2d, Elections, §329, Johnson v. Stevenson, supra.

On the other hand, in Bell v. Southwell, 5 Cir., 1967, 376 F.2d 569, the Court of Appeals for this Circuit did set aside a local election for Justice of the Peace and ordered that a special election be called to fill the office. The Court made no effort to decide the winner of the election. It voided the election. To use the words of the Court, Bell involved gross, spectacular, completely indefensible, state-imposed, state-enforced racial discrimination, with no effective judicial remedy prior to the holding of the election, 376 F.2d at 664. The situation described in such terms was that the voting lists for the election were segregated on the basis of race. Voting booths were segregated according to race, one booth being for white males, another for white women, and a third for Negroes. A number of qualified Negro women voters were denied the right to cast their ballots in the booth designated for white women. Election officials barred representatives of the Negro candidate from viewing the voting, while another was physically struck by an election official. Police allowed a large crowd of white males to gather near the polls, thus intimidating Negroes from voting. Women of the Negro race were arrested for refusing to leave the voting booth designated for white women.

The Court said that federal invalidation of a state election [to redress deprivation of the right to vote for racial reasons] is "a drastic, if not staggering" remedy and is "a form of relief to be guardedly exercised", 376 F.2d at 662.

We read the remedy in Bell as designed to match the enormity of the deprivations involved. The entire election had been conducted in such an unconstitutional manner as to be void.

Moreover, the Court did not embark on an effort to determine who had received a majority of the votes legally cast in the election, with a resultant declaration as to who won the race.

Interestingly enough, Mrs. Bell, one of the plaintiffs, who brought the federal court action as an original suit, had been a candidate in the disputed election, and it was admitted that there was no way, at the time the suit was filed, to challenge the election in the state courts.

See, also, Hamer v. Campbell, a case in which the plaintiffs sought relief prior to the election, 5 Cir., 1966, 358 F.2d 215.

III

The Complaint

Laborious as it may be, we consider it unadvoidably necessary at this point to outline:

Pertinent Portions of the Complaint

III.

"The action of the Complainants is brought both in their own right and on behalf of all other electors who voted for James S. Collins, to enforce their rights under what are commonly called the Voting Rights Act of Congress of 1964 (42 U.S.C.A., §1971, et seq.) and 1965 (42 U.S.C.A., §1973, et seq.), and to protect their rights of suffrage, and of having their votes counted under the provisions of 42 U.S.C.A., §1983, and also to secure equal protection of the laws to their rights of suffrage, which are being denied them at this time, in contravention of Amendments XIV and XV of the United States Constitution. All of which shows jurisdiction in this Court.

VI.

"After the trial in Cause No. 25,400, James S. Collins, vs. Jim Ammerman, in the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, the Court entered Judgment casting out as illegal 55 ballots, and declaring that of these one had been cast for the candidate James S. Collins, one had been lost, and 53 had been cast for the Defendant Ammerman, which changed the result of the election so as to show candidate James S. Collins the winner by 36 votes (J-3, S.T.-37).

VII.

"All of the 53 ballots were illegal, and it is believed and alleged that the same were the result of a concerted effort on the part of those supporting the Defendant Ammerman in said Primary Election to stuff the ballot box with spurious ballots in his favor, but of a certainty the ballots of the 16 persons named in the Court's Finding of Fact No. 6 (S.T.-8) were spurious, and stuffed in the ballot box to swell the apparent vote of the Defendant Ammerman in view of the fact that neither the application or ballot carrier envelope were signed, and the persons did not mark their ballots. This can only mean that someone other than the voter marked these ballots and stuffed them in the box. Indeed, the trial Court found that the 53 votes were obviously manipulated in such a way as to leave no doubt that the votes did not represent the free decision of the voters (J-4); that mental incompetents were voted in this group (J-3).

VIII.

"In addition to, and above those persons named in Finding of Fact No. 6, twenty ballots were cast where the voter failed to sign an application for an absentee ballot by mail, failed to authorized anyone to sign an application for said voter, and each of which voters were physically able to sign such application if they had desired to obtain a ballot (T.S.-4). The Complainants say that this conduct amounted to stuffing of the ballot box with spurious ballots purportedly voted for the Defendant Jim Ammerman by persons supporting said Defendant who procured ballots and voted them in the name of said voters.

IX.

"That all of those 16 voters mentioned in Paragraph VII above are members of the Negro race, as were a vast majority of the 53 voters whose ballots were illegally cast. That the action of the supporters of the defendant Ammerman in preying upon the Negro race, and the illiterates thereof (Finding 9, S.T.-11), so as to deprive them of the right to cast a free ballot, on account of their race and color, violated the federal Voting Rights Acts of 1964 and 1965 and the XV Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America.

X.

"Aside from the ballot box stuffing above described, all of the 53 votes cast by absentee ballot in favor of the Defendant Ammerman were illegal by reason of flagrant violations of the provisions of the Texas Election Code (Art. 5.05, Vol. 9, V.A.T.S.) setting out the procedure and requirements for absentee voting. Some 14 of the 53 had no physical disability or sickness which would have prevented their attending the polls in person so as to have entitled them to cast an absentee ballot by mail (Finding 4, S.T.-6); some 31 in effect had their ballots voted for them when they were physically able to write and to see, through 'assistance' in the marking of their ballots beyond the answering of the voter's question and naming the candidate (Finding 5, S.T.-7); some 25 failed to mark their ballots before a Notary Public or other person authorized to administer oaths (Finding 7, S.T.-9); the voters' registration card of some 12 did not accompany the application filed in the office of the County Clerk for absentee ballots by mail (Finding 8, S.T.-10); and some 9 were illiterate and failed to affix their marks attested to by two witnesses to the application or to the ballot carrier envelope (Finding 9, S.T.-9).

XII.

"In the election contest suit described, Defendant Ammerman sought to have the ballots of some 152 voters declared illegal by reason of the fact that they had voted in a precinct where they did not reside (S.T.-32), reducing this number to some 109 for his final challenge. On the trial of the contest, and at the conclusion of the offer of testimony by the Plaintiff, the Court entered an order 'freezing the pleading', and stating that the ballot of each voter who voted in a precinct other than that of his residence would be cast out, because illegal under the provisions of Article 2.06 of the Texas Election Code (Vol. 9, V.A.T.S.). The Complainants whose names appear on the indicated list, in their own behalf, and on behalf of all other voters who voted in precincts where they did not reside, show that this law as interpreted by the Court denied each of such voters the equal protection of the law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, in these respects:

"a) In addition to the persons named by the Defendant in the election contest as having voted in a precinct other than that of their residence, the Plaintiff added 83 by his proof (S.T. 30-31), and some 300 residents of Precinct 3 were shown to have voted in Precinct 3A (S.T. 15-28).

"b) On Motion to Reopen the election contest, it was shown that following said Primary Election, and upon recommendation of the Grand Jury, a specially deputized committee had made an examination of the registration list in the office of the Tax Assessor-Collector and discovered that some 1,900 persons eligible to vote in the May 2, 1970, Primary had been registered in and put on the voters list of a precinct where they did not reside, and that some 700 of such persons had, upon notification, come by the Registrar's office and had their registration cards changed.

"In these circumstances, the selection of some 109 out of some 500 voters who actually voted in a precinct other than that of their residence, and out of some 1,900 who were registered so to do, amounts to a disenfranchise, and a refusal to give to said 109 voters the equal protection of the law through discriminating against them as a small part of a far larger class of voters.

XIII.

"The Complainants who are of the Negro race, in their own right, and on behalf of other members of the Negro race who are affected by the action of the Court described in paragraph XII, show that Defendant Ammerman sought to have the Court discriminate against them by reason of their race or color, in that the vast majority of the voters on said list of 152 voters, were members of the Negro race, who were singled out for challenge on account of their race. [NOTE BY THE COURT: This occurred at the trial of the election contest, not at the election.]

XIV.

The Complainants show that to permit the certification of the name of the Defendant Ammerman as the nominee of the Democratic Party for County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, to remain valid, and to permit the preparation of a printed ballot for the General November Election with said Defendant thereon as the candidate of the Democratic Party for County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, would be to dilute the vote of the Complainants and all other voters who voted for James S. Collins, would violate the 'one person-one vote' rule, and have the consequence of depriving the Complainants and each and every one of said other voters of their rights of suffrage under the Constitution and Laws of the United States. It would result in the appearance of the ballot in the 1970 November General Election of the name of the Defendant Ammerman as the nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, when in truth and in fact the Defendant did not receive a majority of the legal votes cast at said Primary Election (S.T.-37; J-1).

The Prayer for Relief

"b) That the Court enter its mandatory order commanding the Defendants called Second Group, and each of them and their successors in office, to within five days of said order take all steps necessary and proper for the calling of a new primary election in order that the electors of Harrison County, who are members of the Democratic Party, may select the nominee of that Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, and that said Defendants canvass the results of said election and certify the name of the winner thereof as the nominee of the Democratic Party for said office.

"h) That Group One Defendants, and each of them and their respective successors in office be enjoined from ordering, issuing Writs of Election for, and giving notice of a General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, until the primary election for the nomination of the Democratic candidate for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, (prayed for in Paragraph b) of this prayer) has been conducted, and the winner thereof certified by the proper election officer of Harrison County, Texas, under the orders of this Court.

"i) That Defendants Glenn Link, N. F. Shivers, K. Harold Brown, Doyle Curry and Jim Ammerman, County Clerk, Sheriff, Chairman of the Harrison County Republican Party, Chairman of the Harrison County Democratic Party and County Judge, respectively, of Harrison County, Texas, individually and in their official capacity as the Harrison County Election Board be enjoined from providing any election supplies to the presiding judges of the official election precincts of Harrison County, Texas, for the General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas until the primary election for the nomination of the Democratic candidate for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas (prayed for in Paragraph b) of this prayer) has been conducted, and the winner thereof certified by the proper election officers of Harrison County, Texas, under the orders of this Court.

"j) And for general relief."

IV

Ammerman's Motion to Dismiss

A. The Jurisdiction of the District Court.

28 U.S.C., §1344 is the only Act of Congress conferring jurisdiction on a United States District Court in a state or local election contest (primary or general) to hear and decide the issue of who has received a majority of the votes legally cast.

That section reads as follows:

> "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action to recover possession of any office, except that of elector of President or Vice President, United States Senator, Representative in or delegate to Congress, or member of a state legislature, authorized by law to be commenced, wherein it appears that the sole question touching the title to office arises out of denial of the right to vote, to any citizen offering to vote, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

"The jurisdiction under this section shall extend only so far as to determine the rights of the parties to office by reason of the denial of the right, guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and secured by law, to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in all the States."

There were 127 plaintiffs in this federal court action but not one of them claimed that he was entitled to recover possession of any office [or nomination necessarily prerequisite to becoming a candidate for office, see Smith v. Allwright, 321 U.S. 649 (1944)]. These 127 plaintiffs, therefore, clearly lacked standing to invoke this statute.

Moreover, the complaint showed on its face that it presented no case in which "the sole question touching title to [the] office arises out of denial of the right to vote, to any citizen offering to vote, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude".

Only two citizens of the Negro race had been denied the right to vote when they presented themselves at the polls. This, however, did not occur because they were black but because absentee ballots in their names were already cast. They simply denied the authenticity of those ballots, a question of state law.

As the complaint alleged, the State Court had already invalidated the fifty-five ballots allegedly cast in an illegal or irregular manner for and on behalf of Negro citizens.

The contest had then turned altogether toward state issues, that is, what to do about counting the votes of those who had voted outside the precinct of their residence, a violation of state law.

The plaintiffs must have understood that they had no case within the terms of 28 U.S.C., §1344, because they did not pray for the remedy which that statute provides. Instead, they asked for a new primary.

We hold that the District Court was clearly without jurisdiction to entertain this election contest under 28 U.S.C., §1344.

B. Federal Court Intervention as to Issues of State Law

Since this local election contest had turned toward the legality of ballots cast outside the precincts of the voter, a violation of Texas law and obviously a state question, and since this issue was to govern the outcome of the contest, we must here point out that Federal Courts do not intervene in state election contests for the purpose of deciding issues of state law, if no federal constitutional question is involved. See Gilmore v. The Greene County Democratic Party Executive Committee, 5 Cir., 1966, 370 F.2d 919, 920, in which, with reference to a local election contest, we said:

> "[A] decision by the Alabama Supreme Court as to the meaning of the Alabama statutes dealing with the subject matter of this current appeal will be binding on this court, absent any federal constitutional question."

C. Setting Aside the Election and Ordering a New Primary

Ammerman moved for a dismissal of the complaint on the ground that it raised no substantial federal question.

From what has already been said, the plaintiffs really had no hope of retaining jurisdiction in the United States District Court unless they could present a substantial question under the Bell v. Southwell rationale, that is, that election had been conducted in a racially discriminatory manner of such character and magnitude as to render the election void.

The complaint contained no allegation of segregated voting lists, segregated voting booths, denial of poll watching, personal violence, arrests, or physical intimidation, such as prevailed in Bell.

The gravamen of the complaint was that sixteen spurious ballots were cast, that absentee ballots had not been covered by signed applications or witnessed as required by Texas law. It was alleged that these ballots were cast by or in the name of Negroes, but it is obvious that these ballots were due to be thrown out, whatever the race of the individual who had cast them or in whose name they had been cast. Before the filing of the action in the United States District Court, the Texas District Court had already invalidated these ballots. As already stated, only two Negroes were physically denied the right to vote, but not on account of their race.

We are thus reminded of our language in Hamer v. Campbell, 358 F.2d at 222:

> "This action does not mean that we necessarily would set aside every election in which a substantial number of citizens have been denied the right to vote."

This is especially so, since the complaint charged that the allegedly racially discriminatory activities hereinabove described were violations of the laws of Texas, not countenanced or authorized by the State.

The decisive factor is that in its findings of fact, upon which the issuance of the preliminary injunction was based, the District Court made no reference to racial discrimination or to the denial of the franchise to any individual on account of his race. Instead, the Court found only the "possibility of fraud" which might dilute the votes lawfully cast, plus the possibility that the Texas Court of Appeals "might not" act in time to prevent the mootness of the pending appeal from the State District Court.

This leaves only the "dilution" argument, but if the court having jurisdiction eliminates the votes illegally cast then there is no way that such votes can "dilute" those which have been lawfully cast. It necessarily follows that the dilution contention in this case is wholly without merit.

We, therefore, hold that this litigation raised no substantial federal question and for that reason Ammerman's motion to dismiss the complaint should have been granted.

V

The Failure to Make Collins a Party

Collins contended in the state court that a new primary should be ordered. In his appeal to the Texas Court of Appeals he changed his contentions, claiming that the state district court should have found him to be the lawful nominee. He was not a plaintiff and had not been named a defendant in the federal court action.

This brings us to the decision of the Eighth Circuit in Bynum v. Burns, 1967, 379 F.2d 22. In that case, the plaintiff-appellant was claiming that she had been discriminatorily denied certification as a candidate in the general election (then past) for the office of Justice of the Peace in Lincoln County, Arkansas. The individual elected in the general election was not made a party to the litigation.

The Eighth Circuit said:

> "Of course, under certain circumstances, upon proof of unconstitutional discrimination, the court has the inherent equitable powers to order an election set aside and require a new election. However, even in an equitable proceeding, the court may not act when all the parties affected are not before the court or are not given the opportunity to be heard." 379 F.2d at 233.

VI

The Conclusion

In summary, under the facts and circumstances of this case, we hold:

1. The District Court had no jurisdiction of this case under the provisions of 28 U.S.C., §1344.

2. The facts alleged in the complaint, and found as facts by the District Court, raised no substantial question as to the exercise of jurisdiction under the rationale of Bell v. Southwell, supra, and similar cases.

3. The District Court should not have acted when Collins was not a party before the Court.

4. On the face of the complaint, the dilution argument was without merit.

5. The District Court, accordingly, should have dismissed the complaint.

6. We need not reach or discuss the actions taken or the judgment entered the following year in connection with the issuance of the permanent injunction, for which jurisdiction was based on retained jurisdiction.

Epilogue

In the foregoing opinion we have discussed only a portion of the manifold arguments presented by able and diligent counsel for both sides. They have swept the legal floor clean of every particle of dust which might have been of help to themselves or unfavorable to the contentions of the opposition.

Hence, it may be well to note that we did consider the following items:

1. Since all the plaintiffs had voted they had no standing to bring a class action in behalf of any who allegedly had been denied the right to vote, Hamer v. Campbell, 5 Cir., 1966, 358 F.2d 215.

2. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, none but a candidate claiming to have been injured by illegalities therein occurring can contest the certified results of an election. No private person can bring such a contest on the pretext of "redressing a public wrong." See Butler v. Cumming, 86 S.W.2d 351 (Tex., 1935); Walker v. Sliger, 405 S.W.2d 471 (Tenn., 1966); McLavy v. Martin, 167 So.2d 615 (La. App., 1964). The Texas Statute, Art. 13.30, provides only for contests by "any candidate".

It is noted that in Bell v. Southwell, supra, a defeated candidate was one of the plaintiffs.

3. We have attached no legal significance to "what the Texas Court of Appeals might do", see Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America v. Richman Brothers, 348 U.S. 511, 75 S.Ct. 452, 99 L.Ed. 600 (1955).

At any rate, we were of the opinion that the case should be decided on the points discussed in that part of the opinion which precedes the conclusions above announced.

VIII

Result

The judgment of the District Court is reversed. The case is remanded, with directions that the permanent injunction issued on May 27, 1971, shall be dissolved, the judgment below shall be vacated, and the complaint shall in all respects be dismissed.

REVERSED and REMANDED,
With Directions.

APPENDIX A

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
MARSHALL DIVISION

CIVIL ACTION NO. 1472

ROY HUBBARD, ET AL.,

v.

JIM AMMERMAN, ET AL.

Filed: Sep. 29, 1970

ORDER GRANTING PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

The Defendant's, Ammerman, Motion to Dismiss this cause, having been heard before trial on September 25, 1970, was in all things overruled, to which Defendant Ammerman excepted.

Due notice having been given Defendant, the Plaintiffs' request for a Preliminary Injunction was then presented on the same date, and the Court having considered the verified Complaint and all instruments on file as exhibits, as well as having heard testimony from witnesses, and have (having) considered the arguments of counsel and being fully advised in the premises, finds:

That from the opinion of the District Court of Harrison County, Texas, in Cause No. 25,400, James S. Collins v. Jim Ammerman, and evidence presented on this hearing, it appears that there is the possibility that fraud has so permeated the Democratic Primary Election for a nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, as that the votes of persons who cast legal ballots may have been diluted.

There is also a distinct possibility that a decision of said Cause No. 25,400 on an appeal that has been taken to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District of Texas sitting at Texarkana, Texas, may not be disposed of until after said Cause has become moot.

The Court is of the opinion that unless Honorable Glenn Link, County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, be restrained from placing the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman on the ballot for the General Election, as the nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, the appeal of said election contest, No. 25,400, may not be finally determined, and further that the Plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury unless a Preliminary Injunction be granted.

It is therefore ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that pending further Order of this Court, the Honorable Glenn Link, County Clerk of Harrison County, Texas, his Deputies, representatives and employees and successors be, and he and they are, hereby restrained and enjoined from printing or causing to appear on the ballot for the General Election of November, 1970, the name of Honorable Jim Ammerman as nominee of the Democratic Party for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, and from in any way placing anything on said printed ballot which pertains to the Office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas.

It is also ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that the Defendants Glenn Link, N. F. Shivers, K. Harold Brown, Doyle Curry and Jim Ammerman, individually and in their official capacities as the Harrison County Election Board, their deputies, representatives, employees and successors, all be and they are hereby restrained and enjoined from providing any election supplies to the presiding judges of the official election precincts of Harrison County, Texas, for the November, 1970, General Election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, until further ORDER of this Court, and that said parties individually and in the capacity named be enjoined from holding an election for the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, in the 1970 General Election.

It is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that pending the further order of this Court, each and every voter and elector participating in the General Election to be held in November, 1970, is hereby restrained and enjoined from writing in the name of the office of County Judge of Harrison County, Texas, and the name of any person for such office on the ballot of the General Election of November, 1970, and all election clerks and judges are hereby restrained and enjoined from counting and making any return of write-in votes for such office in said election and the Commissioners Court of Harrison County, Texas, is hereby restrained and enjoined from canvassing any purported returns from said election for such office and from certifying the results of any such returns as to said office.

It is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that this order shall be effective from and after 5:00 P.M., September 25, 1970.

SIGNED and ENTERED this 29th day of September, 1970.

OBSERVATION

A PROBLEM OF APPELLATE DELAYS IN ELECTION CONTESTS

JAMES D. MCKEITHAN*

In the trial of election contests, particularly primary election contests, time is of the essence. The first primary is held on the first Saturday in May and the runoff, if any, on the first Saturday in June.[1] Any primary election contest must be finally determined before the general election in November; the contestant automatically loses his cause if by the time of the general election in November he has failed to secure a final judgment not subject to further appeal.[2]

The Legislature, to meet the problem, has provided that primary election contests must be filed within ten days from the date of canvass, that the case shall be set for trial not more than ten days from date of filing the contest, that there be no more than one postponement (and it not to exceed five days), that notice of appeal to the court of civil appeals and appeal bond must be filed within five days, that such appeals shall have precedence over all other causes in the court of civil appeals, and that the "Supreme Court of Texas shall have no jurisdiction to review any election contest filed under this Act by writ of error, certified question, or any other manner."[3]

These provisions seem clear. But what does a contestant do in such cases when his opponent appeals anyway by application for writ of error to the Texas Supreme Court, thus preventing the mandate from issuing or the appeal from becoming final? And even after such application for writ of error has been dismissed for want of jurisdiction by the supreme court, what is to prevent further filing of a motion for rehearing of the application? The fact is, as a practical matter, nothing can prevent such action under the present Rules of Civil Procedure in the absence of decisive and rapid determination by the appellate courts, and delay is even then unavoidable.

In Hinojosa v. Longoria[4] the canvass of the May 2 primary occurred on May 5 and the election contest was filed May 15. The trial court held that the filing was one day late—that May 15 was eleven, not ten days, after May 5—and dismissed the contest. Contestants appealed to the San Antonio Court of Civil Appeals and filed a motion to advance the cause as provided by article 13.30 of the Texas Election Code. The cause was advanced and oral arguments heard on July 8 (unusually rapid for an appellate court). On July 9, the court of civil appeals reversed the trial court, ruled that the contest had been timely filed, and remanded to the trial court for trial on the merits. July 16 was designated as the last day for filing motion for rehearing; contestees' motion for rehearing was overruled on July 22.

But under the Rules of Civil Procedure, mandate could not issue for an additional thirty days.[5] On the twenty-ninth day, contestees filed application for writ of error to the Texas Supreme Court. Contestants immediately filed a motion with the supreme court that the application be denied for want of jurisdiction and a motion with the court of civil appeals that mandate issue forthwith. The San Antonio Court of Civil Appeals refused to issue the mandate on the ground that the application was pending in the supreme court. The supreme court, then being on vacation, did not act until October 7—denying the writ for want of jurisdiction, but failing to specify that no motion for rehearing would be allowed. Mandate still could not issue since rule 484[6] allows fifteen days for filing of motion for rehearing, and it was too late in any event to remand the case to the trial court, complete a trial on the merits, and secure a final determination by the court of civil appeals prior to the November 3 general election (absentee balloting began on October 14).

Possibly at some point a special appearance in the Texas Supreme Court urging some type of immediate remedy would have terminated the appellate process. But it is submitted that such is an undue burden to place on election contestants, and some modification of the Rules of Civil Procedure or practices of the appellate courts is warranted to insure that election contests are not deliberately rendered moot by appeals directly contrary to the election statutes. The same problem occurs also in general election contests for other than state officers: there the decision of the court of civil appeals is declared to be final except when the validity of a statute is questioned by the decision,[7] or in event of conflict of opinions of courts of civil appeal, or when the judges of the same court of civil appeals disagree upon a question of law material to the decision of the case.[8] Nevertheless, any party may delay by filing application for writ of error to the supreme court within thirty days after final determination by the court of civil appeals, and the only available remedy is the eventual overruling of the application for want of jurisdiction.

In general election contests, the problem is not as acute since the contest is not moot until expiration of the terms of office—usually two or four years—but even this amount of time can be consumed if a new trial is granted and a second appeal thereby necessitated, as happened for example in Guerra v. Ramirez.[9] In primary election contests, the problem is most serious, and successful termination of appeal is often impossible, particularly if the case is initially derailed by the trial court as occurred in Hinojosa v. Longoria. The specific directive in article 13.30 that the Texas Supreme Court shall have no jurisdiction to review primary election contests is meaningless under present practice and will remain so in the absence of further legislative remedy, an amendment to the Rules of Civil Procedure, or a change in the practices of the appellate courts.
